“I've got good news and bad news.”

A cartoon in a national magazine shows Moses with two tablets under his arm coming down a mountain. “I've got good news and bad news,” he says. “The good news is I got Him down to ten. The bad news is adultery is still in there.” Danish theologian Søren Kierkegaard once said: “Most people believe that the Christian Commandments are intentionally a little too severe, like setting a clock half-an-hour ahead to make sure of not being late in the morning.” Founder of Cable News Network (CNN), Ted Turner said that the Ten Commandments are out of date. I wonder which ones he would scrap. “Thou shalt not kill?” or “Thou shalt not steal?” or “Thou shalt not commit adultery.” The Ten Commandments will never be obsolete. Jesus did not intentionally make his teachings a little too severe. He knew that happiness comes from living according to God's will. Breaking God's law, or sinning, brings unhappiness and even death. The life of integrity, or righteousness, is the life God intends for us to live. So according to the Sermon on the Mount, integrity is not an optional extra on the journey of life.”
