Rescue of Jessica McClure

For two days in October 1987, not just a community, not just America, but the entire world was watching with bated breath the drama of an eighteen-month-old little girl named Jessica McClure who had fallen twenty-two feet through an eight-inch opening in a pipeline at a daycare center. For fifty-eight solid hours, over two and a half days, drilling experts, highway construction equipment, pneumatic drills, special air vents, high pressure hydraulic drills, were used in an unbelievable effort to rescue this one little girl. When she was finally pulled from that hole, an entire world cheered. When rescuers finally brought her to the surface, her head was bandaged. She was covered with dirt and bruises, and her right palm was immobilized to her face. She had to undergo five surgeries and lost one of her toes. The drama of Baby Jessica's being lost and found touched hearts. Every parent hugged his/her own child a little tighter. For just a moment in time, one lost little girl became lost to each of them. And when everyone's child, Baby Jessica, was found at last, the entire world rejoiced. Jessica is thirty-four years old now, happily married to Daniel Morales and is a stay-at-home mom of two children.
